With this ISO file, it will be easy for you to get your system up and running again, with no errors in sight!

The Windows Server 2012 Foundation ISO download process is free of charge for anyone looking for a new release of Microsoft's latest operating system released in May 2013. It has arrived just in time too---as the company seems set at odds with federal regulators on numerous fronts.

Just this past year alone, the company is facing a class action lawsuit from its Windows users for faulty software and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The lawsuit was filed after the company's Windows 8 operating system became available and users found that their computer screen settings were back to factory default.

This was not the only problem with the software as it caused problems with thousands of applications that had been installed on various computers around the world. This led to poor reviews of the operating system as well as an increase in tech support calls for Microsoft's software division.

The lawsuit was filed against Microsoft Corporation in January 2013, accusing them of purposefully making its user experience difficult by modifying settings without any warning before hand. This is known as "sneaky programming" which violates California law, according to the lawsuit.

The claim is that the user's emotional distress was directly caused by Microsoft's Windows 8 operating system.

This is not the only time Microsoft has run into legal trouble with its business practices. Just this past year, Microsoft was accused of installing software updates on computers without users' knowledge or approval. This software update would reportedly slow computer performance without users' knowledge or approval, which violates federal law. A federal judge tossed out the case because it lacked merit under antitrust laws.

Despite the fact that Microsoft is not in the best of hands right now, the Windows server 2012 foundation ISO is a great way to get your computer updated with all of the latest patches--and it's free.
